ARIZONA ORE DEPOSITS

Investigations Made In Northern Yuma County By United States Geological Survey.

In the spring of 1909 Howard Bancroft, of the United States Geological Survey, made an investigation of the ore deposits and the economic geology of northern Yuma County, Ariz. The area examined comprises nearly 5,000 square miles of sparsely settled country in which development work has been done at but few localities.

The earlier settlers and prospectors in the region, while at one time on friendly terms with the Indians, later had to defend themselves constantly against attacks and on this account development was rather slow. Placer gold in paying quantities was discovered in the neighborhood of La Paz as early as 1802, and within a year 2,000 men were searching for the precious metal. After the hostile Apaches were placed on reserves, in 1874, the settlers and prospectors were able to carry on their industries more safely.

Mr. Bancroft found that in central-western Arizona mining is not carried on under the most favorable conditions. Wood, timber and water are scarce, and most of the properties are far from the railroad, so that a long haul is necessary to ship out the ores and bring in supplies.

Deposits of gold, copper, lead, iron, and quicksilver are present within the area examined. The mining districts in this area are described in detail in a report by Mr. Bancroft, recently issued by the Geological Survey as Bulletin 451, which may be had on application to the Director of the Survey at Washington, D. C.
